Investment Summary

For the month ending 30 April 2020

General Market Commentary

April was a good month for investors with strong increases across equity markets following the previous months Covid19 collapse. For the month of April, the S&P500 led the way with a return of +15.6%, the FTSE100 +10.9%, the NZX50 +7.5% and the ASX200 8.7%.

A large reason for the U.S equity market rally has been the monetary response of the US Federal Reserve. The mantra of April was "Don't fight the Fed", with US equity markets now pricing in a V-shaped economic recovery. Interestingly, the bond market is a little more sceptical, with bond yields and equity markets disconnecting in April. Generally speaking, when equity markets are rising, bond markets are expected to fall or remain flat.

Both international bonds and NZ Bond prices rose as some investors remained cautious. The NZ Government Bond index increased 2.35% for the month of April and has returned +7.96% over the last 12 months.

Statistics wise, it appears that the Virus has peaked worldwide with a number of Countries now emerging from lockdown. The question on investors' minds ... is the rally in equity prices sustainable? Only time will tell.
