

General Market Commentary

Global markets came off the boil in August, with investors unsettled from the get-go when credit ratings agency Fitch downgraded US government debt from AAA to AA+. It was an unexpected move, despite the fact US debt now hovers around 123% of GDP, up from 60% in 2007. A wobbly bond market and a raft of ratings downgrades across the US banking sector didn't help the mood.

Investors were further rattled by grim news on China's economy, dashing hopes it would emerge from its prolonged pandemic lockdown as a key driver of global economic growth this year. Instead, China is underperforming on almost every economic measure, with imports, exports, industrial production, and retail sales all weaker-than-expected. Meanwhile, its ailing property sector is only adding to its woes.

This matters because of China's usually huge appetite for other countries' stuff. Australian markets were particularly depressed given its hefty reliance on Chinese demand for its raw materials. However, sentiment rallied later in the month on the back of cooling inflation - Australia's consumer prices increased by a lower-than-expected 4.9% in July compared to the previous year, down from 5.4% in June.

US markets also clawed back some losses over the month as inflation continued to soften and the tight jobs market showed signs of easing. Meanwhile, US Federal Reserve (the Fed) Chair Jerome Powell's much-anticipated speech from the central bank's annual conference had a little something for everyone. He said the Fed still had a way to go to get prices under control, but would proceed "carefully" before deciding on its next policy move.

At home, investors found little to get excited about, despite a slight uptick in unemployment in the June quarter and a slump in retail spending boding well for the fight against inflation. Farming stocks came under particular pressure after Fonterra lowered the price it expected to pay farmers for milk twice in as many weeks. Political posturing also played a part in choppy markets after National clapped back at Labour's $4 billion savings plan with a $14.6 billion tax package aimed at the "squeezed middle".

Against this backdrop, most global markets ended August in the red. The S&P500 finished down 1.77%, while the tech-focused NASDAQ ended 2.17% lower. Closer to home, the NZX50 slid 4.16% - its worst trading month in more than a year - while the ASX200 fell 1.42%. Meanwhile, the FTSE100 finished down 3.38%.
